He was unwilling to make a prediction about the future of our country, which has been more than a century in the making. We need to begin to think about the future of our children, our children's children, the children of our children, and of the rest of the world."

"I don't know if we have enough time to work out a deal," he added.

"If there is a deal, the Russians are going to leave, and that's what the Russians are going to do. But if there is not a deal, my country is going to leave. I don't know what the Russians are going to do. They are going to be a part of the world's greatest power, the world's leader. These are the people."

He said the leaders of the seven countries who had signed on to the deal expressed the same view.

"We're going to start talking about the future. We're not going to stop fighting for our future. We're going to fight to get our future and to get our people back out. We're going to get our people back on our side. We're going to get our people out. We're going to get our people back into our world. We're going to get our people back into our country
